AFS PROGRAM AT WOMAN'S CLUB

Over seventy members and guests attended an American Field Service program held at the Rochester Woman's Club on Wednesday evening. Miss Elizabeth Hastings, principal of Fairhaven Junior High School and Student Coordinator of the New Bedford Area A.F.S., and Mrs. Clayton Taylor, chairman of the New Bedford Area Committee, were speakers. Mrs. Taylor spoke with enthusiasm of the A.F.S. International Scholarship Program and read an informative letter from the New York office recently received which gave an idea of the value and wide scope of this program. Mrs. Taylor introduced Miss Hastings as one who has been a pioneer in this field. Miss Hastings spoke of her pleasure at the news that the formation of a three-town committee comprising Marion, Mattapoisett and Rochester was imminent and gave a general outline of the functions of this committee. She emphasized the important part that this student exchange program plays in creating better relations with other countries of the world through the ambassadorship of these young people. Miss Hastings then introduced Mr. John R. Minter, chairman of the Marion Chapter, A.F.S., and acting chairman of the newly-formed three-town committee which will elect officers at the next meeting on November 28. Mr. Minter spoke briefly of his experience with A.F.S. during the past year and a

Anna was sent to Australia through the program and gave a short talk telling of this valuable experience and about the customs and school system in this country "down under". The students from Apponequet were accompanied by Mrs. Haywood and Mrs. Lois Cookson, president of the A.F.S. Lakeville, East Freetown and Berkley Chapter for Apponequet. Mr. Otis C. She was entertained with other students at the Rochester Woman's Club at that time and is remembered as a charming, vivacious miss. Mr. Chase is a committee member of both the Rochester School Committee and the Rochester Regional School Committee. Other guests who attended were committee members of the new three-town committee who attended the initial meeting last week at the Old Rochester Regional High School; a group of six members from the Old Rochester Regional Student Council--Robert Joslin, Carol Arenberg, Sue Wickenden, Johanna Teachman, Christine Mesarch and Anne Lacey; Gilbert D. The entertainment which followed the A.F.S. program seemed a most fitting conclusion to this interesting evening. Miss Marion Braman, a ten-year member and a vice-president of the Boston Chapter of the National Association of Dance and Affiliated Artists, Inc., presented a group of her students who performed a number of national dances colorfully garbed in the costumes of these countries. COMMODORE E ROSS ANDERSON SPEAKS TO MEN'S CLUB

The Mattapoisett Men's Club and guests heard an interesting talk on the Nefertiti at the Congregational parish hall on Tuesday night. Commodore E. Ross Anderson, one of the backers of the 12 meter, gave the story of the building of the boat and the training of the crew. He said that the idea first came up after a successful race of his own sailing yacht Lord Jim in which he used young small boat sailors as his racing crew. In the flush of victory the question came up, "What next?" Commodore Anderson promised his crew that if no one else built a new 12 by the middle of December that he would start one. When it became apparent that there was to be no new boat to defend the America's Cup, he determined to build one. In order to break a long standing dominance of Steven's designed 12 and perhaps make a break through with a new concept, Commodore Anderson chose two Boston

Dear friends,
We are not surprised when people express a lack of information about the funeral director's work. Need for the mortician's services comes to the average family once in fourteen years.
When that need arises, the family faces a strange, perplexing situation. Your funeral director assumes all those perplexities. He knows what to do and how to do it.
We do our utmost to relieve you of worry and details.
Respectfully,
Carl C Cornwell

designers to come up with designs and models to be tested. At the end of three weeks Ted Hood had two models ready for the tank and the other designer decided to bow out. Mr. Hood, an internationally known sailmaker, had also designed several ocean racers which had shown up well in their class. The models were tested in the Steven's tank and one of them showed very good possibilities. This model became the Nefertiti. Commodore Anderson showed slides of the planning and step by step building of this boat. A huge loft was hired and full size scale plans were drawn on the white painted floor. The laminated mahogany ribs were then bent, clamped and glued directly on these drawings. The slides followed all of the steps involved from the pouring of the keel to the placing of the ribs and finally the planking, sanding and finishing of the hull. Commodore Anderson said that, with all the modern machine tools now available, there is still no replacing the skilled craftsman with the hand adze. Many of the most vital parts of the boat were carefully shaved into shape with this ancient tool. The rudder was built of a group of timbers bonded together and then adzed and planed into the tapered, graceful wedge.

The 12 meter boats are built to rigid specifications and inspected by Lloyds of London, but within these limits there is room for differences. The Nefertiti is the widest of the American boats and the lightest. She carries a small mainsail and the largest jib area. One of the slides showed a comparison of the 12's and the old J boats such as the Rainbow and Ranger. The 12 meter is about half the size of these older cup defenders.

In the Nefertiti crew a system was developed to rotate the winch men so that each member of the crew could share the work and the boat could constantly have fresh men at the winches. Movies were shown of this phase of the training of the crew as well as a few shots of the preliminary races.

Commodore Anderson mentioned that the Australian boat Gretel was an extremely good boat. He said that they could have won at least two more races in the series but that on both occasions they were out foxed by Mosbacher. On Wednesday he was due at the New York Yacht Club to receive a new trophy. This trophy donated by the Lipton Co. goes to the boat that contributed most to the trials. Nefertiti, the US'
